

HITLER OFFERS PEACE PLAN

Undeclared Bobcat Grid Teams to Clash Here at 8 p.m. Friday

Walnut Ridge Will Show Heavy Squad, Team Averages 174

Both Squads Are Reported To Be In Physical Shape

4TH GAME OF SEASON

Visitors Have Two Stars In Milligan, End, and Coffey, Quarter

The kickoff at 8 p. m. Friday will send the Hope Bobcat football team into an intersectional clash with the undefeated Walnut Ridge Bobcats at Hammond stadium.

The locals will be facing the biggest team to date, the official weight release showing the Walnut Ridge team to average 174 pounds to the man. The Walnut Ridge line averages 182 pounds, the backfield 160.

Although the visitors' record to date has not been as impressive as that of Hope, reports indicate that Walnut Ridge has been "pointing" for the Hope battle and the team is expected to put up a hard fight to the end.

The up-state eleven boasts two outstanding stars in Coffey, 170-pound quarterback, and "Bull" Milligan, 220-pound right end. Milligan is reported to be exceptionally fast for a big man, running the 100-yard dash in 11 seconds. He frequently is used on end-around plays, and is said to be a great defensive player.

The Walnut Ridge team, according to reports, left that city Thursday and stopped over for a work-out on some neutral field before entering Hope. This report, however, could not be confirmed.

Coach Fay Hammond announced Friday morning that his team would be in shape, but feared a slight let-down because of the tough El Dorado battle last week.

Hammond, however, said some of the members of the team were taking Walnut Ridge with "much seriousness" in view of their big, heavy team.

Charles Ray Baker, halfback, will be the only Hope regular who will not start. Baker has a knee that has been giving him trouble, and will see part of the game from the bench.

Sonny Coleman, dandy blocking back, has been given the assignment, and will start in the backfield with Ellen, Taylor and Daniels.

Sonny Murphy and Jimmy Simms will get to show their "stuff" if the score is anywhere near even at half-time. Murphy is a left-handed, while Simms is playing his first year of high school football. He has three more to go, and Hammond is anxious to give him as much experience this season as possible.

The officials for the game: Gerns Howard, Omachita, referee; Bill Sumner, Henderson, umpire; Evans, Texarkana, headlinesman; Earl O'Neal, Hendrix, filed judge.

Game-time is 8 o'clock.

Cox Oil Mill at Prescott Opened

Celebration Held for C. of C.-Sponsored Industrial Project

PRESCOTT, Ark. — The Prescott Chamber of Commerce sponsored a program Thursday, celebrating the opening of the Nevada county oil mill.

Nathaniel Dyke, chairman of the Arkansas Council of Agriculture, Science and Industry was the principal speaker. He discussed "What Industry Means to Arkansas."

Other speakers were: H. K. Thatcher, executive director of the state Agricultural and Industrial Commission, who spoke on "Peanuts and Soy Beans"; Senator Ellis Fagan, Little Rock; E. Smith Reid, Little Rock, engineer of the state Agricultural and Industrial Commission; H. G. Gingles, Benton; and Ernest Cox, manager of the mill here.

A luncheon was given at the Loda hotel for guests and Prescott business men. William E. Denman, president, and Tom J. Conpton, chairman of the Entertainment Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, had charge of the program which was held in the open air theater in the city park following a concert by the Prescott band.

Research Required for Good Farming

George Ware Tells Rotary Club of Two Kinds of Cottonseed

"Private industry spends for scientific research to improve its production methods and goods about $1.70 for every $100 in sales—but there is spent for scientific research in agriculture only 37 cents per $100 in sales, and this is paid for by government," George W. Ware, assistant director in charge of the Fruit & Truck Branch Experiment Station here, told Hope Rotary club Friday noon at Hotel Barlow.

The value of research is specific, he added, taking as an example the local station's experiments with two groups of cotton seed. The high-yield seed showed a return of $52 per acre, the low-yield seed $32. But the production cost for the first was $28, yielding a profit of $24 per acre; while the production cost for the second was $25, yielding a profit of only $9—one-third the profit of the high-yield seed.

Mr. Ware gave an interesting summary of all scientific developments, reporting that one observer had said that the invention of the tin can led to granting the right to vote to women—tin-can-cooking gave them leisure, and leisure aroused in them an interest in political affairs.

Club guests Friday were: M. R. Owens, Little Rock; and W. L. White, Dallas.

Will Restock Red Lake Near Fulton

Sen. Pilkinton Announces Delivery of Fish From Hatchery

The Little Rock office of the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission Friday notified state Senator James H. Pilkinton of Hope that it had instructed its fish hatchery at Lonoke, Arkansas, to make a delivery of fingerling game fish to Hempstead county this week for restocking Red Lake near Fulton.

Mr. Pilkinton said that the state fish distribution truck will arrive in Hope about noon Saturday, October 7, to enroute to the lake with the load of fish, and that if possible some of the interested fishermen in Hope and Hempstead county should accompany the truck to the lake and assist with the planting.

He said that the distribution truck would be met here by Miles Laha, Hempstead county game warden, and that local persons who wished to accompany the truck to Red Lake should be ready to go upon its arrival in town so as not to delay the planting of the fish.

Operation of a bicycle is prohibited on the streets of Cumberland, Mo., unless the bike is in good mechanical condition and the operator has a special permit from the safety department.

Protect U.S. Liner

HYDE PARK, N. Y. — (AP) — President Roosevelt told reporters Friday he was dispatching naval vessels and coast guard cutters to guard the American steamship Iroquois, as a very good illustration of the operation of the neutrality patrol in Atlantic waters.

Asked whether his action meant a precedent was being established that warships would accompany other American ships, the president replied in the negative.

British Angry

LONDON, Eng. — (AP) — The British admiralty, commenting on the German statement that the United States liner Iroquois might be sunk, said Friday:

"It is surprising that an officer of the former imperial Germany navy like Admiral Raeder should bemoan his uniform by lending himself to such baseness."

The suggestion, made to Washington through the United States naval attaché at Berlin by the German commander the admiralty asserted, "enables us once more to realize and measure the criminal mentality of the Nazi party leaders."

Germany Warns U. S.

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The White House announced late Thursday receipt of a warning from the German navy that the United States liner Iroquois, now somewhere in the North Atlantic with a full load of American passengers, would be sunk near the American coast. The ship is due in New York Wednesday.

Who would do the sinking was not made clear. The German admiralty, which denied sinking the British line Athena which some American lives were lost, said the sinking of the Iroquois "would be accomplished through a repetition of circumstances which marked the loss of the steamship Athena." German sources accused the British of sinking the At-

German Sea Raider Renews War Started by Emden and Seeadler in Last Conflict

Sinking of British Steamer Clement Counts Warning

Von Luckner Became Greatest German Sea Name in World War

STORY OF EXPLOITS

Lone Wolf Ranged Two Oceans and Left Destruction, Fear

By NEA Service

Onitously, the blasts that sent the Athena to bottom off coast of Brazil, sound warning to allied shipping. Loudly, they echo memories of two effective German raiders of the first World war.

How did the 10,000-ton Nazi "pocket" battleship, Admiral Scheer, slip through the British blockade in the North Sea? Is it to become a Seeadler or an Emden of the current campaign?

In 1916 the allied blockade ring was uncomfortably tight around Germany. Somebody must run the blockade, strike back. Count Felix von Luckner, the "Sea Devil," took the job.

An American schooner, the Pass Bahma, had been captured by a U-boat the year before, was resting idle at Bremen. That was to be his vessel. Taking a windjammer through the blockade—then buccannery on the high seas! The task was the kind Von Luckner relished. He disguised the boat as a neutral Norwegian freighter with the entire crew trained to speak Norse. Timber provided the fake cargo. Hidden guns were installed.

Under cover of a pitch black November night, the Seeadler slid out of the Weser river and into the North Sea. In a storm it passed the British blockade and was tossed into the Arctic.

Christmas Present For Germany

A few days later Christmas brought the Seeadler a present—a wind which drove the ship south. The English cruiser Avenger sighted the Seeadler, halted it, but failed to penetrate the disguise. The Seeadler was free. First target was the British steamship Gladys Royal off Gibraltar on Jan. 11. The crew was removed and a bomb sent the Gladys Royal into a dive.

Next came the Lundy Island, with a cargo of sugar. Then the French Charles Gounod; the H. M. S. Percy, out from Nova Scotia and disguised as a U. S. boat; the French Antonin; the Italian Buenos Aires.

In eight weeks on the Atlantic, waters had either two or four funnels; the Emden had three. So Von Muller erected a fake funnel of wood and canvas.

Hitting the Calcutta-Bombay seaway, the raider captured the Greek ship Pontoporus, with 6500 tons of coal for the British. Next morning she took the English transport Indus.

The following day brought two more captures and two more sinkings, plus the seizure of the Kabanga, headed from Calcutta to New York with American-owned goods. The Kabanga was eric-ed to the Emden's train as a prison ship.

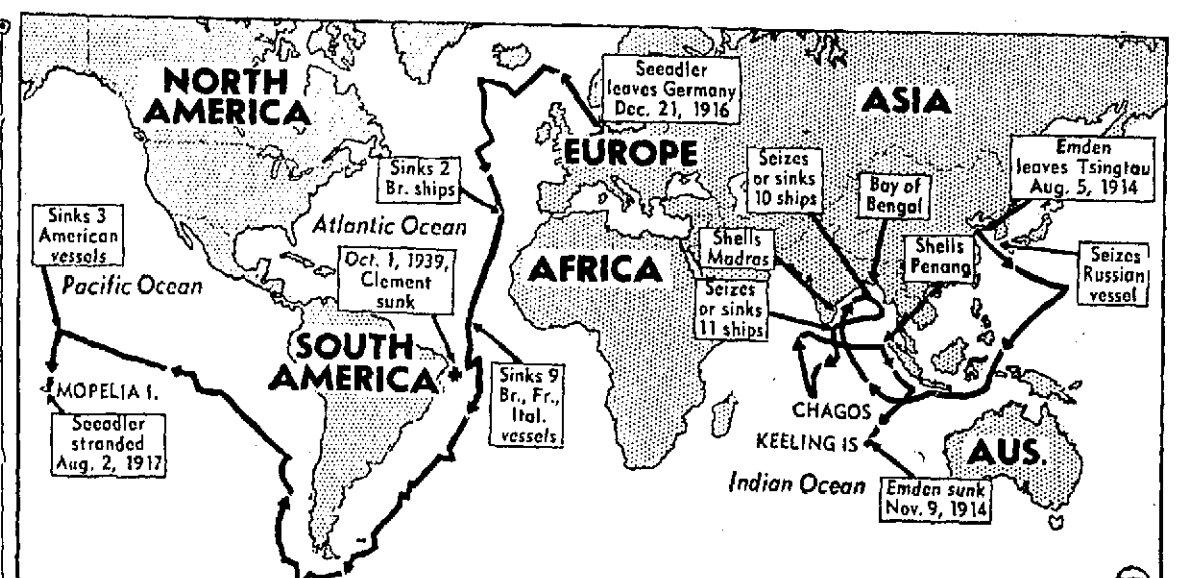

With a British squadron at her heels the Emden shifted to the Madras-Calcutta route, bagged the British collier Trabbuck and the Clan Matheson.

Then creeping into Madras harbor itself, the Emden poured a full salvo into Port St. George and tanks of the Burma Oil Company. A stray shell struck a merchantman in the harbor. After 123 rounds had been fired the sky was as light as day, many tanks had exploded, the city was in panic. The Emden fled.

Later the Emden expedition steamed into the harbor of Penang. A French armored cruiser in the bay was the lure, the Russian cruiser Jemischug was what she got.

Stopped by Australian Cruiser

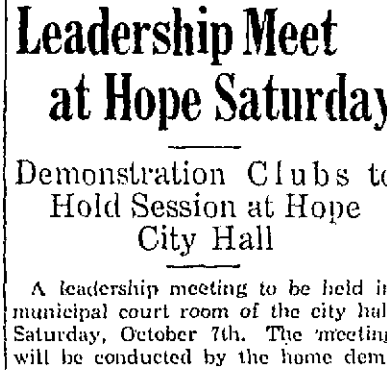

The Sydney, Australian, cruiser, brought Waterloo to the Emden in a long battle off North Keeling island on Nov. 9, 1914, as Captain Von Muller made a daring effort to cut Raiders' routes: The Emden operated largely in the Indian Ocean; the Seeadler cruised South Atlantic, then raided to open operations during the latest war.

Demand Embargo on Arms Retained

Many Senate Opponents Then Will Agree to Bill Revision

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A dozen senate opponents offered Friday to accept revised neutrality legislation which would retain the arms embargo now in effect, and set up requirements for cash payments on belligerents' purchases.

Meanwhile, Senator Thomas, Utah Democrat, declared no nation could complain against repeal of the arms neutrality bill is to prevent American ships from carrying war supplies overseas, because the administration's to belligerents.

Big Hope Melon for University Team

Mrs. Hattie A. West Sends 119-Pounder to State University

FAYATEVILLE — (AP) — The giant watermelon that took first prize at the Hempstead county fair at Hope last week will be eaten by the University of Arkansas football players.

The express company, which according to the express company, weighed 119 pounds, was sent to J. W. Fullbright, university president. By Mrs. Hattie A. West of Hope, whose grand son, Tabbit Field, Jr. is a student in the university.

The prize-winning melon was grown by O. D. Middlebrooks of Hope, champion grower of the state's premier watermelon section. Middlebrooks raised the 195-pound watermelon a few years ago that still holds the world's championship.

President Fullbright, after examining his gift melon, decided that the Razorback football squad of 48 members was the only campus group husky and hungry enough to consume the huge melon. So some afternoon after practice the Razorbacks will tackle the 119-melon.

FRANKFORT, Ky. — (AP) — Governor Chandler, a high official source disclosed Friday, will resign Monday and be appointed United States senator by Lieutenant Governor Keen Johnson who will succeed him as the state's chief executive.

(Keen Johnson, now lieutenant governor, was chosen governor in Kentucky's recent election.)

Japanese Losing in Major Battle

Invaders Falling Back From Drive Against City of Changsha

HONGKONG — (AP) — A Japanese setback with heavy losses appeared Thursday to be the result of Japan's first major military offensive against China in nearly a year.

Chinese reported that a co-ordinated campaign aimed at Changsha, capital of Hunan province, had been repulsed and that the Japanese were falling back across the Mi river, 40 miles north of the city.

The Japanese offensive was launched a few days after Japan and Russia reached a truce September 16 in hostilities along the frontier between Manchoukuo and Outer Mongolia. It was designed as a severe blow at Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek's forces. Estimates of the number of men involved ran as high as 500,000.

Chinese reports which Japanese failed to deny, said Chiang's forces were recapturing towns along the Hankow-Canton railway north of Changsha as the Japanese fell back. The Japanese drive started from the Lake Tungting region, southwest of Hankow, and headed down the railway line.

Chinese said the Mi river would form the temporary boundary between Chinese and Japanese forces.

A year ago Japanese pushed so close to Changsha that much of it was burned by the Chinese in accordance with their "scorched earth" policy of preventing valuable buildings or equipment from falling into enemy hands.

Germany Asks No More Territory, He Tells Reichstag

Alternative Is a Frightful European War, He Declares

BRITISH STUDY IT

But "More Than Words" Has to Be Pledged, London Reminds World

BERLIN, Germany. — (AP) — Adolf Hitler Friday proposed a European peace settlement "on a comprehensive basis" but added that if the Allies rejected his "outstretched hand" this statement "will have been my last."

"Then we shall fight," he went on, and pictured the new war as one sure to bring unprecedented horror to the world.

"May those peoples and their leaders who are of the same mind (as himself) now make their reply," he said in an hour-and-20-minute speech to the Reichstag and the world.

He challenged the Allies to "interpret these opinions of mine as cowardice, if they like."

"I need not occupy myself with what they think: I make these statements simply because it goes without saying I wish to spare my own people this suffering."

Hitler declared "neither force of arms nor lapse of time will conquer Germany. It is an infantile hope for the disintegration of our people."

His Plan

These were among the other material phases of his speech:

1. Renunciation of further territorial claims, save for old colonial demands.
2. Declaration that Germany and Soviet Russia together "relieve one of the acutest spots in Europe" by working for a peace zone in eastern Europe.
3. Specific assurance to the world that he had no designs on Rumania, the Ukraine, the Urals, or Denmark, nor expansion in eastern Europe generally, and Scandinavia as well. His interests are wholly economic.

The British View

LONDON, Eng. — (AP) — The British government said Friday night that Hitler's peace proposals would be "subjected to careful examination in consultation with the governments of the dominions and the French republic."

"But," the statement added, "it is necessary to remember two things: 'First—no peace proposal is likely to be accepted which does not effectively free Europe from the menace of aggression.'"

"Second—something more than words will be required to establish confidence in any peace proposals Germany might make."

Methodist Revival Bringing Results

Attendance Is On the Increase—Junior Choir Is Organized

Interest in the revival at the Methodist church continues to grow. Reverend C. B. Wyatt has done quite well in organizing a junior choir and in developing interest in the young people's meetings.

The hour spent in these group meetings after school and again at 6:45 at night are bringing results, if interest and number are to be taken as an indication.

Reverend Kenneth L. Spore preached two powerful sermons on Thursday, while the sermon on Friday morning was a continuation of thought in presenting another phase of Paul's ministry.

His challenge to his audience came in the statement that the "religion of people about us is the instrumentality through which others are saved." Using Paul as the model, he called upon every member to be a witness for Christ at all times.

Services will be held at 7:30 Friday night. There will be no morning service on Saturday morning, but the usual services will be held Saturday evening at the usual hour, 7:30.

There are 17,464 wires in each of the cables supporting the San Francisco-Oakland bridge.

What Rights Are We Prepared to Defend by Force?

It is probably mere chance that not one of the many neutral ships torpedoed without warning in the North Sea happened to be an American ship. Unless the United States has better luck than it has any right to expect, this will happen sooner or later.

The Swedish steamers Gertrude Bratt and Silesia, the Danish freighter Vendia, lie on the bottom of the sea. The first two were carrying wood products to England, the third was empty, bound for the Firth of Forth. The Germans take the position that they would not be bound for Britain unless on business necessary to carry on the war, and that therefore they are subject to sinking; search is unnecessary; all business of nations at war today is war business.

What happened to Sweden and Denmark yesterday may happen to the United States tomorrow. On September 14 Secretary Hull gave notice that the United States "has not abandoned any of its rights as a neutral under international law." That, we take it, is for the record, for reference in some future day, when international law shall again become active. Nobody knows at the moment what international law is, if indeed there is any. Professor Beard has called it "a veritable jumble of claims, assertions, treaties, pledges, and hot contentions." As a practical matter, "international law" today is what you make it, and what you are prepared to keep it.

It might be international law that American salesmen can sell lollypops to the soldiers up and down the Maginot Line. But almost anyone will agree that it would be pretty silly right now to insist on any such right. Just so, there will be many who think it quixotic to insist that American freighters can deliver wheat to Liverpool, and who will wonder just how safe American ships should expect to be who sail for England on the Aquitania with her grim-looking 12-pound guns. International law, or no international law, does any sane person expect that a German submarine commander is going to come to the surface, hail the Aquitania, and carry on a pleasant conversation under the shadow of those guns?

The United States will have such neutral rights during this European war as it is determined to defend with force, and no others. It is just as well to determine now, during the neutrality debate, what rights we propose to enforce, and to insist on no others. That is the kind of a world it is, and it is unrealistic to act as though it were some other kind.

That is why Secretary Hull urges Americans in Europe to come home only on American ships. They have the "right" to come in the Athenias, but it is not now wise to exercise that right. That is why the American nations plan a "peace zone" around their continents equivalent to the "war zone" around Europe. The "peace zone" is reasonable, and there is some chance that we may be able to enforce it.

Now, if ever, is the time for America to be realistic in action, and to provide a nice, quiet room in which the international lawyers can sit and split hairs undisturbed until sanity returns again to earth.

Food Controls in Europe Prelude Possibility of Famine in New War

Last in a series of articles on epidemics and war.

Food controls undertaken by many European nations may avert this time the starvation that occurred during the first World War in Germany and became a factor in the defeat of the central powers.

Recognizing the importance of nutrition in time of war, the British government has already set up plans for controlling the nation's food supply by establishing a Ministry of Food. The government has become the sole purchaser of imports. Plans have been made to eliminate speculation in foods and to control food prices. Five staple classes of commodities are represented, including: (1) butcher meat, (2) butter and margarine, (3) bacon and ham, (4) lard dripping and other cooking fats, (5) sugar.

Sugar is one of the items most initially involved in times of war. In our own country plans are already under way to prevent vast speculation in sugar.

Sixty million ration cards and 19 million household application cards have already been printed in Great Britain in case a nutritional emergency arises. Reports are widespread as to the rationing that has begun in Germany. By a system of cards and coupons every fundamental food is controlled as to its supply and distribution.

Especially interesting is the new German attitude toward the control of alcohol, tobacco and coffee as factors in war. A special decree affecting military fliers has been issued by Goering which prohibits them from standing or sitting around tables where alcoholic beverages are dispensed. It prohibits the consumption of alcohol immediately before and during duty and the sale of foreign tobacco.

Definite hours when all such substances may be sold are set.

Although the consumption of coffee in Germany is already lower than that of other countries of comparable population and size, Goelbel has published an article announcing that the use of coffee is an unhygienic act, from an economic rather than from a hygienic point of view. In his decree, he said, "In restricting the use of alcohol and nicotine we make economic in foreign exchange which we need more imperatively for the other new materials."

In World War I, it was recognized that the winning of the war was a race for food. Hunger stimulates revolt. As the civilian population breaks down in morale because of hunger, the effects are soon felt on the warring fronts and lead to defeat.

Memorial

This appreciation I bring to you of our departed friend is not a formal memorial, but just such a story as would naturally develop, if I were writing a letter to any one of you, telling you something of her life, personal incidents, and her passing away.

Some of her friends have said to me, "I cannot realize Mrs. Saner has gone," or, "It will not seem like a Boy View club without Mrs. Saner." Many of us feel the way. It does not seem possible that she will not mingle with us any more—it all seems like a dreadful dream.

I do not bring this tribute in a spirit mourning and sorrow, but rather to stress those precious memories as flowers from the garden of my heart, that they may be an inspiration to you as they are to me, and that our faith may be deepened in a blessed immortality—for one has said, "To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

I am not alone in saying we shall miss her and shall long for the touch of her hand, and the sound of her voice, and the kindly greeting that always lit up her face with a radiance, showing her cheerful, friendly spirit, and that expressed the Christian graces.

She was gentle, amiable, charitable, communicative, sincere, unselfish—she was a good neighbor and citizen—under all conditions she had poise—in truth, she was a gentlewoman.

She was progressive. She kept young in mind and heart, and kept abreast with the ever changing times. All through her illness up to the last two weeks of her life, when I visited her, she would ask "What is the latest news, what is going on in the world?" Mrs. Saner was born in Dallas county, Arkansas, but, in infancy was moved with her parents to Nashville, Ark., where she lived a happy childhood and young womanhood. She loved the town in which she was brought up, and never lost interest in it, or its people.

She was reared by Christian parents, and early in life became a member of the church of her choice, where she was active in all departments of work—and, too, in this, her adopted town, she was an active and efficient member in all the work of her church. She loved her church, and was always loyal and faithful to its every interest, but she was no narrow sectarian. She was always liberal with others of a different faith.

She came to Hope in 1892 the bride of Dr. W. F. Saner. She soon made for herself a unique place in the hearts of the people of her adopted town, and she particularly loved and cherished those friends she made during the first years she lived in Hope.

It was my good privilege to have known her many years, and, like you my life has been made richer by association with her life.

Her own home life was well known to many of you—as a homemaker, wife and mother. I cannot say anything finer than that said by the wisest man about a good wife and mother—"She looketh well to the ways of her household—the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her—her children arise up to call her blessed—her price is far above rubies."

Mrs. Saner had talent as an organizer, as demonstrated in the organization and promotion of this Boy View Reading club. For twenty-seven years it has functioned successfully—much of it due to her wise suggestions, counsel and leadership.

Her interest in it never waned. She left it a strong club, through which its cultural influence has given strength and uplift to those who, through the years, have been connected with it.

From the things she said and did from time to time, more and more I realize that she felt from the first that, perhaps, her last illness had come. It was Saturday morning, June 10, I went early to see her, as I tried to do every morning. She looked better, her voice stronger, her eyes brighter than at any time that week. She had dressed, and had walked across her room. As I arose to leave for home, she said: "I want you to come at five o'clock this afternoon—no one else present—and do something for me no one else can do." Like a flash it came to me what she had in mind. Promptly at five I was there. We talked together quietly and calmly, as though she were going on a visit, and wanted me to look after her affairs at home.

Without a quiver in her voice she dictated, and I wrote her wishes and instructions with regard to every thing connected with her funeral and burial, and the disposition of her property. When we had finished, in order to relieve the tension, if there were any, I said, "I don't think you will ever need this, you look very much better today, but you have done wisely, you have left it off of your mind, and will not be lying awake thinking about it." She replied: "One never knows what might happen. You take this home and keep it confidentially—if I get well you are to return it to me, if not, it is for Bryant."

Mrs. Saner loved the beautiful and the finer things of life. In a radio sermon Dr. Stamm said—and I quote his words—"Funny the things that come into people's heads as they near the end of life." Which reminded me that Mrs. Saner must have had a vision of that "light never seen on land or sea."

It was Tuesday before her passing on Thursday, as we sat by her bed silently watching—she seemed to be asleep, she moved her mouth as if she wanted to speak, and she said distinctly: "There are beautiful gardens of flowers all around me. Could it have been a glimpse into the beautiful beyond?"

At 6:30 p. m. July 6, this noble spirit of our beloved friend quietly slipped away to her heavenly home in the Eternal City.

Her funeral service was conducted as she had planned it, in the presence of loved ones, and a large company of friends. The many beautiful floral offerings were a silent testimony to the esteem in which she was held. As "Crossing the Bar," as she had wished it, there was no mourning—just a sense of gratitude, hope and love for having known her. The memory of her good life lingers as a sweet fragrance upon all of us.

"But we shall not call it death! No! It is not death, it is only life begun, For the gates are pass'd and heaven is won And her ransomed spirit hath reached the shore Where they sin and sorrow and suffer no more. To depart from a world of suffering and strife Is to be with Jesus! Yes! this is life."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The Forerunner of the King
Text: Matthew 3:2-17
By WILLIAM E. GILROY D. D.
Editor of Advance

The forerunner of the King and the Kingdom was John the Baptist, who came from the wilderness, into the crowded cities and villages of Judea, proclaiming that Kingdom of Heaven was at hand and calling upon men to repent.

We must not forget that in addition to being associated as forerunner and Messiah, John the Baptist and Jesus were related by family ties, for a long course of years, John—nearly 30 years, in fact—during which time each must have been known to the other through their family contacts.

There is no reference to these things in the Gospel of Matthew, from which our lesson is taken, but the story is related with great exactness in the first chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke. It tells of the announcements of the birth of John Zacharias and his wife Elizabeth, and of Virgin Mary. Luke also tells of the relationship between the two women and of the coming of Mary into the house of Zacharias and Elizabeth.

These details throw a great deal of light upon the more meager and matter-of-fact narrative in Matthew. They give a more adequate background to a scene that is somewhat barren if we think of John the Baptist suddenly coming from the wilderness to proclaim the coming of a King with whom he had had no prior contact and of whom he had had no prior knowledge.

One does not know just at what stage during these 30 years of preparation John withdrew into the wilderness. His life was probably always to some extent a life apart. His parents were old, and his father was engaged in the service of the temple. The sense of holiness and destiny attaching to the announcement of his birth would tend also to strictness in preparation. Even before he entered the wilderness, John was probably some kind of a recluse and ascetic, not taking very active part in the throbbing life of the time.

On the other hand, Jesus would seem to have been always very close to the life of the people. We have the record concerning His Life and His home, that He "increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man." The pictures which artists have portrayed Him as a carpenter in the home or workshop of His father, however much they may be inaccurate in detail, are probably accurate in their main suggestion and setting.

He was brought up neither in the wilderness nor in the busy city but in Nazareth, a hill town, a busy place in a populous district, but nevertheless in an environment where His contacts with the daily life of the people and with the surrounding country were of the sort that one finds so strongly emphasized in all the references of His later teaching. He found in the out-of-doors not the wildness of the desert, but the glory of the lilies of the field and of the waving grain.

These differences are significant. They emphasize, for one thing the difference between preparation and fulfillment. Here is a place for asceticism and sacrifice. There are things that can be done only at great cost and effort, and Jesus Himself was to make the supreme sacrifice. But the profound emphasis in the life and teaching of Jesus was not on the barrenness of the Wilderness or upon life negotiations, but rather on the richness and abundance of the full life, the life of joy in nature and in grace.

SERIAL STORY

WORKING WIVES

Yesterday On Feb. 1 Marian leaves the office with a bouquet. She holds her days' mail with preparations for the arrival of the baby. One day she meets Angie Jordan, wishes her to come to the apartment.

CHAPTER XXVIII
MARIAN and Angie Jordan, each carrying a large paper sack, went to Marian's apartment. They talked of inconsequential things until they were seated in the sunny windows. Angie took it for granted that Dan was the head of Marian's house and Marian let her think so.

Marian opened the conversation by saying, "I did a thoughtless thing once, Angie, a cruel thing. I didn't realize it at the time, but now I know."

"I've hated you for a long time, Marian—but I don't know—if it hadn't been you it would have been someone else."

"Yes, Sally Blake did the same to me. It was when she began to edge in on me that I thought of you, realized what I had done. Women are cruel to each other, Angie."

Angie shrugged. "What about men being cruel—what about Grant Fellows?"

"I know—it's a law, I guess. After all, to the men we work for, we are nothing more than machines. When we get rusty, when our mechanism slows down, when we have lost our new, shiny look, we are replaced by a later model."

Angie nodded. "You are among the lucky few, Marian. You have a husband and you are going to have a child. When I first worked for Mr. Fellows I could have married. A fine man wanted me, but I couldn't see it. I was ambitious for a career, I thought marrying a poor man was hiding my talents."

"Marrying a poor man, keeping his home, bearing his children—it's the greatest career in the world, Angie."

"Yes, it's where we women belong."

After a little silence, Marian said, "Tell me about yourself, Angie. In my poor way I'm trying to make amends for the many years when I thought of no one but myself. I want my baby to have the right kind of a mother. I want you to know that I'm sorry for what I did to you—I want to ask you to forgive me."

"Thank you, dear, I too am glad to have the little hurt erased. Fortunately, I was a before-hand person. I have a small annuity and live comfortably, happily. I think I shall live even more happily after today." She smiled and there was understanding between them.

Angie remained for lunch. When she went away, Marian felt that one more wrong had been righted. It was as if she were impelled to smooth her past life, put it neatly in order, before taking the onward path.

SHE rested during the afternoon, dreamy, contented. Dolly would soon be back, she would hear from Dan on the morrow. Even his brief notes were things to be anticipated. Always there was the hope that she might find some personal bit, some sign that he cared for her. At 4 she dressed, planning to spend several hours at the neighborhood theater. The evenings were apt to be rather lonely. But that would soon be over. Soon there would be two persons in the apartment.

It was unreasonably warm and she made a tall glass of iced coffee, pouring the hot, amber liquid over cracked ice. It steamed pleasantly, the glass frosted over. Rich cream gave the glass opaque, golden shades. Sipping the drink, Marian was startled by a brisk rap on the door. One of the neighbors. They were kind, her neighbors, keeping an eye on her. She opened the door.

"Carma Forbes—" she exclaimed. "My dear—I'm glad to see you! Come in quick."

Carma came in. Her dark suit was as smart as ever, her small hat as extravagant, but there was a subtle difference. The restlessness was gone, serenity had taken its place. She did not glow like Dolly, she had not acquired Marian's wistful beauty, but she was serene, at peace. Marian hurried to the kitchen for another glass of iced coffee and Carma followed.

"Well, well," she said, "I guess I'm just one jump ahead of the stork."

"Hardly that," Marian laughed. "Most any minute I'll be presenting the more or less appreciative world with another citizen."

"I heard that you had quit your job, but I had no idea you were doing yourself proud like this. I got your address from Mr. Fellows." Holding her glass, she sat down and looked around the pleasant apartment. "You're a homemaker at heart, Marian."

"Do you think so?" delightedly, Carma nodded. "How's Dan?"

"Oh, fine."

"I haven't seen him since—that night."

"Don't talk about it if you'd rather not, Carma."

"I'd give my right hand if it had never happened."

CHURCH NEWS

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH

William R. Hamilton, Pastor

"Behold the Lamb of God" will be the Pastor's subject at the 10:45 service Sunday morning.

"An Old Story Repeated Today" will be the discussion at the 7:30 service Sunday evening.

It is encouraging to us that there have been additions to the church every Sunday for several weeks. Many of them have been on profession of faith and by Baptism. One of the principles in the two services Sunday will be that of sharing the Gospel with the unsaved who may come to church hoping, however vaguely, to find eternal salvation.

The Sunday school classes under the leadership of seventy-five consecrated officers and teachers are beginning a new series of lessons. Let every one of the over hundred enrolled pupils make an effort to be present at 9:45. Bible in hand, prepared for an intelligent discussion of the lesson and a prayer hearing of the Pastor's sermon in the preaching service.

As the new Baptist training Union year gets under way, all church members are invited to be on hand at 6:30, ready to begin active participation in the Union of their age group. Visitors are always welcome to the services of the First Baptist church. Hope Association meets in Annual Session at Beech Street Baptist church, Texarkana, Thursday and Friday of next week. Large delegation from the First Baptist will probably attend. The Thursday morning session opens at 10.

The Revival which has been in progress at the Methodist Church for the past week will continue throughout the coming week and close with the services on Sunday, October 15. There have been excellent crowds and fine interest in all of the services to date. The pastor announced on Wednesday night that up to that time there had been 21 additions to the church up to that time, during the meeting.

Young People's Meetings are being held each day, including Sunday, at 6:45 P. M. Children's meetings each school day at about 3:45 p. m. The W. M. S. will meet in the regular Business meeting at the church at 3 p. m. Monday.

Rev. Charles B. Wyatt of Stamps is doing some excellent work in leading the singing and conducting the children's and Young People's services. The Pastor, Kenneth L. Spore is doing the preaching.

Evangelist L. J. Cooper will be the speaker at the 1:00 o'clock service Sunday at the Hope Gospel Tabernacle. Rev. Cooper is at present conducting a tent meeting in the city. His friends are invited to hear him at the Tabernacle Sunday morning.

The Pastor will speak Sunday night at the evangelistic service in the Tabernacle on "The Man At The Carpenter's Bench." Sunday School will be conducted as usual at 9:45 a. m. under the direction of Superintendent Guy E. Bayne, and assistants.

The Bible Class, Christ's Ambassadors (Young People), June C. As and Children's church all meet in their respective rooms at 6:45 p. m. The annual business meeting for held Tuesday night, beginning at 7:45. All members are urged to attend, and all others who are interested in the Tabernacle's progress are asked to be present. Some very important business is to be discussed.

Garrett Memorial Baptist Church Sunday School meets 9:45. Brother Grady Halstrom, superintendent. We urge all who can to come to Sunday School and be on time.

Our pastor's subject for the morning will be "The Precious Blood." We urge the members of the church to be present and bring your friends. All classes of the B. Y. P. T. C. will meet at 6:30. You will enjoy working with our young people.

us has done things that simply turn us cold when we think about them." Marian felt qualified to speak on that subject.

"I have tried to forget, but it's a black memory. I must have been insane."

"If we learn through mistakes—if we try and try—I'm preaching to myself, Carma."

"I have learned," seriously. "I'm trying."

"Are you working in Springfield?"

"No, I'm going to be married. I'm here in Chicago to buy my trousseau."

"That's lovely. Do I know the lucky man?"

Carma shook her head. "I knew him in high school. I used to hear from him when I lived here. He has a hardware store in Springfield." Carma spoke without enthusiasm.

"You don't love him, Carma?"

"No, but I like him a lot. We'll have financial worries, business is bad in his line. I'll wear my clothes year in and year out. But I don't care. I thought maybe—if I made a go of it—I could wipe out this other thing."

WERE they all making amends? Was life compromise and sacrifice? But were they not fortunate to have a chance to make amends?

Marian said warmly, "You'll find happiness, I know you will." Carma looked down, brushing an imaginary something from her skirt. "Do you ever see them—Pete and Julie?"

"No, it's been a long time."

"I wrote to Julie. I apologized. I said I wanted her and Pete to think well of me, if they could."

"Did you hear from her?"

"Yes, a nice little note. Pete added a postscript, 'To a grand girl. Thanks and forget it.' Oh, Marian—it isn't right that any woman should lose so much just because she's a fool."

Marian knew what she meant. She, herself, was living on a vague hope that she might be given another chance. Without that hope she would have wanted to die. Carma had no hope.

"You're a good sport, Carma," she said.

Carma was dining with friends and she hurried away. "Give Dan my love," she said. "Tell him that I'm going to make a papa out of my husband one of these fine days."

Marian put on her hat. The picture of a neighborhood theater was Dark Victory. Dan had liked it, he had wanted her to see it. Dark Victory—must one go through the darkness to be victorious?
